Is Congress Listening?

This is Hugh Hewitt for Townhall.com.

The results of Tuesday's election in Virginia have the most significance of all the votes across the United States. Virginia had gone decisively to President Obama a year ago—and the swing into the Republican column was enormous, a genuine landside that comes only when a major political realignment has occurred.

Despite Democratic spinners and talking heads sympathetic to Obama, the bottom line is clear: Virginians fairly shouted at the top of their lungs at the president and his Congressional allies: Stop the spending, stop Obamacare, stop the huge lurch to the left.

We hope the so-called moderate Democrats in the Congress are listening and they take Virginia's message to heart.

I'm Hugh Hewitt.
